While Exche Commisioner Harburger handsomely dressed woman entered and announced herself as Mrs. W. Hoffman, of 549 Tenth avenue. She said that she had applied for a saloon license some time ago, but had not yet received it.

"I understand, I think," she said smilingly, "how I can get the license, as I have had to do this thing before."

She then pulled a large roll of bills from her reticule and offered them to Mr. Harburger. The Commissioner pushed back her hand and said.
"You may have done this with the old Board, but you can't do it with us."

The woman attempted to close the door of the office, but Commissioner Harburger prevented her from doing so, and told her to leave his office.

The Commissioner at once went to his colleagues and in executive session told them what had occurred.

When an "Evening World" reporter asked Mr. Harburger about the matter, the Commissioner rushed into President Murray's room, where Messrs, Murray and Woodman were seated, and shouted at them:
